NICK WINKFIELD

Nick Winkfield was born in England and graduated from Cambridge University in modern languages and philosophy. He began his career with Gillette, in sales and market research and from 1975 has specialised in marketing and communications research, with interests in socio-cultural analysis, cross-cultural communications within organisations and their markets, and the motivational implications of change.

Nick Winkfield is currently Director of stakeholder studies. He has presented papers and written articles for Demos, the Market Research Society, the Institute of Public Relations, Management Centre Europe and various other training and management development organisations in the USA, Europe and the Middle East. He has contributed to several books, most recently on cross-cultural issues and organisational development.

Although a researcher, Nick Winkfield is less interested in empirical data than in using it to provoke new thinking and improve the quality of debate on his various themes.
